Reflection to Student Loans and Their Consequences

This topic is actually very interesting to me. I really enjoy researching about differences and penalties of student loans. As a student who had taken out a certain amount of student loans, it is smart to be aware about all the consequences and strings that it brings attached to them. As I researched a lot, I found very intriguing information and information that I would never have thought that would usually happen to people, for example, the suicides.

This paper has helped me find more information on the topic because I had been studying it since high school. It was strange that there was a lot of content regarding the question I wanted to talk about. I thought I was going to be stressed when it came to finding information, but I found just the right sources and I enjoyed them all. I read different sources that placed in all different parts of the world and how people pull schemes off loans as well. As I wrote this paper, I also thought it is extremely important that all students who take out loans should be informed about what they get themselves into.

What was a bit challenging to me was how to form everything into words and put all the numerical statistics into the paper. I found that all that information was extremely important so somehow some way I had to incorporate it all. Furthermore, I was very intrigued writing this paper and I actually really enjoyed it.
